Studying in Italy

What do you need to be able to study in Italy?

Degree at University? First, you need to have the same qualifications as you do to go to University in your own country, which generally means having completed High School (age 18 / 19 approx) for a detailed view of minimum requirements for applicants go to study-in-italy.it

Second, you need to know some of the lingo, unless you are doing a course in English. Each University provides the possibility to do a course with them, which you need to pass to start studying there. So, don't worry if you don't know Italian, but you'll need to work hard at it once you get here.

You want to study Italian?

For beginners there are no prerequisites, obviously, while for higher levels, a competency test is provided, which you need to pass. The University of Siena offers 3-month courses in Italian, have a look and see the dates of these courses at cluss.unistrasi.it recommended by Italy101.

Cooking? There are no entry requirements here, but, the better your knowledge of Italian, the more you will benefit from the course. Cookery courses abound. You can do short term, weekend courses, or longer ones, check out Slow Food Italy at slowfood.it or, we recommend italiancookerycourse.com because their courses cater for a more international audience, they speak English! Buon appetito!
